

Why is the study of Religious Studies important?

Understanding the views of those around you. Questioning your own beliefs. Developing the ability to sympathise and accept other views. What could be more important to the well-rounded development of a young person?

Religious Studies is more than just the knowledge of religion. It is the interaction with living beliefs, the consideration of philosophical and ethical issues, the interaction with current affairs. All with an open mind to consider the information and reach informed opinions about these. It is an ever developing, evolving and changing discipline as relevant today as it ever has been. The ever-changing multicultural society in which we live contains the interaction of different faiths and world views at every level. Religious Studies is ideal to ensure that students are able to respect these views and critically analyse information they receive.

The study of other views and world beliefs opens up a whole new perspective on the world around us, by looking at things through a different pair of eyes we not only develop an understanding of others but also learn to appreciate our world more.

The themes which can be studied are current topics of which students will have general knowledge, but this will be deepened to enhance understanding and allow them to consider their own views. The nature of these topics also means that they are frequently touched on in world affairs, making the study of these themes relevant to everyday life and ensuring they are not static.

Some of the big questions in the subject include things like; is there a God? What is God like? Why do bad things happen? What happens when we die? Can there ever be peace? Is war ever the right course of action? Do prisons do more harm or good? What is a family? Should we all be treated equally?

We study Edexcel GCSE Religious Studies B. The choice of religions and themes is at the discretion of individual academies to ensure the course is tailored to the needs of the students and local community.

What skills will the study of Religious Studies teach you?

Students will develop a variety of crucial skills within Religious Studies, skills which are valuable within all aspects of life not just academic progress.

Evolution – the ability to critically consider different ideas and opinions before reaching a justified decision. A skill which is invaluable in everyday life, from the day to day decision making to more important and unique decisions.

Critical analysis – the ability to look at an opinion, viewpoint or information and not take it at face value, but rather to consider, critique and question what you are told. A skill needed to make informed decisions throughout life.

Empathy and understanding – the ability to understand and share the feelings of others. Whether it is a stranger, the victims of a tragedy, friends or family it is a skill that is vital to well-rounded emotional development.

Tolerance of other views, cultures and beliefs – combined with the above skills, and in light of our multicultural world this is a skill which will be used every day. The ability to understand that there are other views which are as equally valid as your own along with the ability to evaluate and critically analyse these views is something which every student needs to be a global citizen in their future.

You can also deepen and secure their knowledge through enrichment with your subject teacher.
